To support the world premiere production of I'll Hold Out My Hand and My Heart Will Be In It by R. Eric Thomas, directed by Rebecca Wright. The play will follow members of a family in transition as the characters navigate loss, relocation, career changes, and relationships. The story also will look at the increasing reliance on technology in modern life.	2021	1	$15,000	1/1/2021	3/31/2021
To support the world premiere production of My General Tubman, a new play by Lorene Cary. Set both in 1860s Auburn, New York, and in contemporary Philadelphia, the protagonist Harriet Tubman bridges the two time periods by appearing to the present-day characters in visions. Related project activities include a workshop for local students designed to deepen their engagement with the play.	2020	1	$20,000	1/1/2020	4/30/2020
To support a production of 74 Seconds...To Judgment, a new play by Philadelphia playwright Kash Goins. Inspired in part by Reginald Rose's classic Twelve Angry Men, the play tells the story of a jury of six who have been deadlocked for a week during a homicide trial. Goins allows every character to have separate interpretations of the case without comment or condescension on their points of view. Performances will be followed by community discussions facilitated by the playwright, cast, and artistic staff.	2019	1	$15,000	1/1/2019	3/31/2019
To support the annual Chinatown Mid-Autumn Festival and related folk arts education programs. Chinese-American artists will present a variety of traditional Chinese arts and crafts, including performances of opera, instrumental music, acrobatics, martial arts, and demonstrations of crafts such as lantern making, kite construction, and calligraphy. Additionally, students from Philadelphia's Folk Arts Cultural Treasures Charter School (FACTS) will participate in the festival, performing with the FACTS Grade School Choir and interviewing and documenting the traditional artists.	2021	1	$10,000	3/1/2021	12/31/2021
To support the Mid-Autumn Festival. Local and regional Chinese performers will present a variety of traditional Chinese arts, including opera, instrumental music, acrobatics, and martial arts.
